FOR RELEASE UPON RECEIPT

April 5, 1982

"When two people marry, the expectations and experiences they bring with them from their families-of-origin often collide and produce fireworks," according to Dr. Bernard J. Brommel, professor of speech at Northeastern Illinois University and co-author, with Kathleen M. Galvin, of the newly-published book Family Communication: Cohesion and Change (Scott, Foresman and Company).

"Each family has its own set of rules, ways of communicating, and methods for achieving emotional and physical intimacy," Brommel explained. "If two people from vastly different family backgrounds marry, they are bound to have conflicts unless they recognize their differences and come to terms with them. The solution to this dilemma lies in communication, the one characteristic that most successful families share.

"Each of us must first understand our family-of-origin and our place in it before we can begin to examine the family we have formed as an adult. The-family-of origin serves as the first power base in which a child learns to function. The strategies used there are often repeated later by the child in his or her adult life. To understand our own action in the families we form as adults, each of us must examine the ways in which physical and emotional intimacy were achieved in our family-of-origin, patterns of communication in the family, and the way power was distributed and used in it."

ADD I

Brommel defined "family" as "any two or more people who live together and care for one another in a meaningful way." He pointed out, "Only seven percent of all U.S. families consist of a mother, father, son and daughter. Fifty-one percent of all women work outside the home. The traditional family with dad as the sole bread-winner and mom at home with the children no longer exists in appreciable numbers. Those who work in family counseling know that family roles are far less rigid than they've been in the past."

"Dangerous" is the word Brommel used to describe many "how-to" books that suggest there is one sure-fire prescription for achieving an ideal family life. "Families are as distinctive as finger or voice prints, and anyone, professional or layman, who denies this fact can do a great deal of damage to families which may already be troubled."

Brommel said that he and his co-author, Kathleen M. Galvin, brought their own very different family experiences to the writing of Family Communication. Galvin, who is Irish, was an only child raised in New York City. Brommel, one of nine children born of a German father and an Irish mother, was raised in a small Iowa farming community.

In addition to being professors of communication, Galvin and Brommel are family counselors. Brommel said that if he could give only one piece of advice to someone wishing to improve their family life, it would be: "Work at communicating with other family members."

The Northeastern Illinois University baseball team won three games, lost three and tied one game this past week. Northeastern's overall record is seven wins, six losses and a tie. The Golden Eagles have won three and tied one in Chicagoland Collegiate Athletic Conference (C.C.A.C.) play.

Northeastern led 4 to 1 with a three-run home run by Andy Politis (Amundsen H.S.) providing most of the offense. A grand slam by McKendree in the bottom of the sixth inning wiped out the Eagle lead and gave McKendree a 5 to 4 victory. In the second game, Northeastern scored four runs in the first inning and held on for a 4 to 3 victory. Larry Gates (Gordon Tech. H.S.) and Rick Szukala (Schurz H.S.) hit home runs for the Eagles, Szukala's coming with three men on base. Andy Griffin (Fenwick H.S.) was the winning pitcher.

The Northeastern Illinois University baseball team lost two games last week. The losses give Northeastern an overall record of seven wins, eight losses and a tie. The Golden Eagles Chicagoland Collegiate Athletic Conference record remains at three wins and a tie.

On Sunday, April 4, the Eagles traveled to Illinois State University and lost a double-header. In the first game, Northeastern got off on the wrong foot when two Eagle errors permitted Illinois State to score three unearned runs. Illinois State upped their lead to 5 to 0 in the fourth inning before the Eagles began their comeback. Northeastern scored two runs in the fifth inning when Dave Soto (Lane Tech H.S.) singled in two runs. In the sixth inning, the Golden Eagles scored another run on a sacrifice fly by Larry Gates (Gordon Tech. H.S.). The Northeastern rally was blunted later in the inning on a controversial call by the umpire. Rick Szukala (Schurz H.S.) tripled home two runs but was called out for not wearing N.C.A.A.-approved headgear. Though the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics permits the type of helmet Szukala wore, all runners had to return to their original bases and the batter was ruled out. Northeastern scored one more run in the seventh inning but lost 7 to 4.

In the second game, Northeastern scored in the first inning on a home run by Gates. Illinois State ran away with the game, scoring 13 runs to beat

A "Seminar on Equal Marriage and Child Rearing" will be presented on Wednesday, May 19, at 7:00 p.m. at the Northeastern Illinois University Commuter Center, 5500 North St. Louis Avenue. The admission-free program is sponsored by Northeastern's Women's Studies Program.

Two professional couples, one black and one white, will share their professional expertise and personal experiences in forming and maintaining equal marriages and in sharing equally in the joys and tasks involved in raising children. The participants will be Betty Brown-Chappell, assistant professor of human services at Northeastern, and her husband, Michael J. Chappell, a former equal employment opportunity trainer, and James Lucas, associate professor of music at Northeastern, and his wife, Martha Thompson, associate professor of sociology at Northeastern. The Chappells have a three-year old son and a two-month old daughter and Thompson and Lucas have a three-month old daughter.

Thompson stressed that neither she and her husband nor the Chappells plan to set themselves up as models that others should consider emulating. "Jim and I plan to discuss the potential each couple has for creating an egalitarian relationship, one in which both partners are fully equal," she said. "Society places many constraints on such couples.

"Two people may be deeply committed to forming an egalitarian relationship and to having a child but if each of them has a totally inflexible work schedule, there will have to be some trade-offs.

"Society does not encourage or promote truly egalitarian relationships. One of the things we hope to do in this seminar is to encourage people to not only seek personal solutions to their problems but to also have some concern for the ways that society needs to be changed so that more people can have egalitarian relationships."

Betty Brown-Chappell pointed out that since 50 percent of all married families have two breadwinners, it is important for a man and woman to negotiate and work out a system for an equal marriage. Before they were married seven years ago, she and her husband Michael worked out a pre-nuptial contract.

"Very often, two people will have implicit understandings about many things," she said. "If people would come to explicit understandings about who is expected to do what, relationships would function more smoothly."

ADVANCE RELEASE TO JIM MARTINEZ

May 11, 1982

Dr. Jorge Prieto, a Cook County Hospital physician and a leader in Chicago's Hispanic community, will be the recipient of Northeastern Illinois University's second Honorary Degree of Doctor of Humane Letters. The honorary degree will be conferred on Dr. Prieto at the university's commencement ceremony on May 17 at Arie Crown Theater.

A resident of Evanston, Dr. Prieto has served as Chairman of Cook County Hospital's Department of Family Practice since 1974. Under his leadership, the department trains young family doctors to serve in low-income areas and emphasizes quality health care for Chicago's minority populations. Last year, more than 48,000 low-income blacks and Mexican-Americans received outpatient care at Cook County Hospital's South Lawndale Health Center, at the Claude Holman Health Center and Fantus Clinic. All three health centers were established by Dr. Prieto's department.

In addition to his work at Cook County Hospital, Dr. Prieto has served as president of the North Shore Chapter of the Catholic Interracial Council, as a consultant on family life to the National Bishops' Committee for the Spanish-speaking, and as a member of the board of the Comprehensive Health Planning of Metropolitan Chicago. He currently serves on the boards of Catholic Charities of Chicago, and the Latino Institute of Chicago, and he is a former member of the Columbia College board. Dr. Prieto is also a physician for the United Farmworkers, founder of the Mexican-American Council on Education, and a member of state advisory committees on migrant labor and urban health.

Jorge Prieto was born in 1918 in Mexico City during the Mexican Revolution. His father, who served as both mayor of Mexico City and as governor of the state of San Luis Potosi, was forced into political exile in the 1920s. Prieto was reared in Texas and California. He attended the University of Notre Dame and the Universidad Nacional de Mexico where he earned his degree as a physician and surgeon in 1949. He interned at Chicago's Columbus Hospital.

"From the first day of medical school, I knew I wanted to work with the 'braceros,' migrant Mexican farm laborers in the United States," Dr. Prieto said. He spent the first 18 years of his career treating low-income Mexican-American and black families in a convent-turned-clinic near Chicago's Maxwell Street. Dr. Prieto was one of the first Latino doctors in Chicago. He was named to his current post at Cook County Hospital because, as one hospital administrator explained, "Cook County is the people's hospital, and we needed his social vision here."

Ronald Williams, President of Northeastern Illinois University, said, "As an urban university, Northeastern Illinois University's mission is to use our educational tools, expertise and resources to enhance the quality of life in our community. Dr. Prieto's contributions represent the manifestation of our mission, the model we want our students to emulate. In honoring Dr. Prieto, we honor the ideals for which we stand."

The life and work of Zora Neale Hurston, a black novelist, journalist, critic and folklorist whose writings have only recently been rescued from obscurity by scholars, will be the subject of a Feminist Study Group program on Wednesday, May 26, at 7:00 p.m. at Northeastern Illinois University, 5500 North St. Louis Avenue, in the Commuter Center, room CC-217. The admission-free program is co-sponsored by Northeastern's Black Women's Caucus and the Office of Women's Studies.

Dr. Ayana Johnson, coordinator of the Office of Admission and Records at Northeastern's Center for Inner City Studies, will discuss her research on Hurston, the most prolific black woman writer in America between 1920 and 1950. Johnson will also have on exhibit ceramic sculpture that she created in the course of her research on Hurston and that represents to her different aspects of Zora Neale Hurston's life and work.

In her dedication to I Love Myself When I am Laughing and Then Again When I am Looking Mean and Impressive, an anthology of some of Hurston's work, Alice Walker writes: "In reading through the 30-odd-year span of her writing, most of us, I imagine, find her alternately winning and appalling, but rarely dull, which is worth a lot. ... Only after she died penniless, still laboring at her craft, still immersed in her work, still following her vision and her road, did it begin to seem to some that yes, perhaps this woman was a serious artist after all, since artists are known to live poor and die broke. But you're up against a hard game if you have to die to win it, and we must insist that dying in poverty is an unacceptable extreme."

Zora Neale Hurston is the author of many short stories, essays, articles and plays. She published four novels, including Their Eyes Were Watching God and Moses, Man of the Mountain, and her autobiography, Dust Tracks on a Road.

Dr. Ayana Johnson holds a master of arts degree in Social Science and Anthropology from the University of Chicago. She was awarded her doctorate degree in Literature and Anthropology from Union Graduate School in Cincinnati. She has served on the faculties of Northeastern Illinois University and the University of Illinois in Chicago.

Immediately following the workshop, the American College of Sports Medicine will offer a certification session at Northeastern Illinois University on July 29 and 30. Certification of Exercise Test Technologists by the American College of Sports Medicine is an attempt to provide a standard for those who desire to offer proof of their competency and skill in the many aspects of graded exercise testing. The American College of Sports Medicine charges an additional $85.00 fee to those individuals who wish to take the certification examination.

Nearby hotel and dormitory accommodations are available for out-of-town participants. For information on the workshop, certification session, or accommodations, please call George R. Lesmes at 312-583-4050, ext. 498.

UPTOWN CENTER TO CLOSE JULY 1

Effective July 1, 1982, Northeastern Illinois University will transfer all classroom instruction and community service work-study activities offered at the Uptown Center, 4802 North Broadway, to the university's main campus. The center, operated by the university's Office of Community Services, is being closed because of declining enrollments. Those students enrolled at the center will now be served on the university's main campus. The Office of Community Services will coordinate all community work-study activities from the main campus.

No decision has yet been made on the relocation of the university's Tenants' Rights Clinic, a paralegal educational program coordinated at the center by the Department of Criminal Justice. The university remains committed, however, to continue support for a paralegal component within the Department of Criminal Justice.

By closing the Uptown Center, the university will save more than $30,000 in rental and instructional costs. This savings will enable the university to increase the number of students enrolled through the Office of Special Programs that offers support services to students with special needs.

Northeastern opened the Uptown Center in 1970 as a satellite facility where community-oriented academic programs could be offered. Community services offered at the Uptown Center included General Educational Development (G.E.D.) test preparation, social service referrals, and tutoring services for elementary and secondary students. Northeastern's Department of Human Services was affiliated with the center until 1975 when the department transferred all of its programs to the main campus. In 1979, the Department of Criminal Justice established a Tenants' Rights Clinic at the center as a supplement to its curriculum.

FOR RELEASE UPON RECEIPT

June 14, 1982

Dr. George R. Lesmes, coordinator of the Human Performance Laboratory at Northeastern Illinois University, is one of 47 American educators to be named an American Council on Education (ACE) Fellow in the 1982-83 ACE Fellows Program in Academic Administration. Lesmes' selection was announced recently by ACE President J. W. Peltason.

The ACE Fellows Program in Academic Administration, established in 1964, is designed to strengthen leadership in American higher education by identifying and preparing faculty and staff for responsible positions in academic administration. Most past ACE Fellowship participants have made significant advances into positions of leadership in college or university administration.

As an ACE Fellow, Lesmes will be assigned to work with several administrative offices including that of Northeastern's president as an administrative intern. In addition, Lesmes will spend a part of the year studying at other universities. He will attend three week-long seminars on the problems of academic administration, read extensively in the field and produce an analytical report.

Under Lesmes' leadership, the Human Performance Laboratory trains students in the areas of exercise physiology and cardiac rehabilitation.

The laboratory also offers fitness evaluations that help determine individuals' capacity for safe exercise. Lesmes designed the university's master of science degree program in exercise physiology and cardiac rehabilitation, the only such program offered by an Illinois public college or university.

Lesmes is a Fellow of the American College of Sports Medicine. He has served as chairman of the Mayor's Council for Recreation and Physical Fitness in Chicago, and as a member of the Chicago Heart Association and the Chicago Planning Council of Aging and Rehabilitation of the Mayor's Office for Senior Citizens and Handicapped.

Before joining Northeastern's faculty in 1977, Lesmes was a research associate at the Desert Research Institute in Boulder City, Nevada, and a postdoctoral fellow at the Human Performance Laboratory at Ball State University in Muncie, Indiana.

Lesmes is the author of many articles on physiological adaptations to chronic stress. He has also lectured extensively on the subject.

He received his bachelor of arts and his master of science degree in Exercise Physiology at Queens College in New York. He was awarded his doctorate degree in Exercise Physiology at Ohio State University.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

The Northeastern Illinois University Office of Women's Services will present a panel discussion entitled "Counseling the Abusive Male" on Thursday, June 24, at 7:30 p.m. in the university's Commuter Center, 5500 North St. Louis Avenue, Room CC-214. Admission to the panel discussion is free.

According to Kendra Reinshagen, acting coordinator of Northeastern's Office of Women's Services, women are the principle targets of physical and sexual assault in this country. In recent years, some attempts have been made to assist the victims of these crimes. Advocacy programs and protective shelters have been established and new laws such as Illinois' Domestic Violence Act have been enacted.

Many of those who work with physically and sexually assaulted women believe the problem is two-fold: the female victim must be helped but the male abuser should also receive counseling so that he can work at changing his behavior patterns.

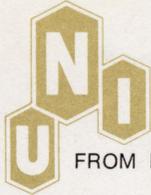

Participating in the "Counseling the Abusive Male" panel of experts will be Michael Fleisher, co-founder of the Men's Council on Violence Against Women who will outline the history of the growing men's movement and its effort to examine the negative effects of sexism on men's lives; Tom Ryan, a counselor from the Child Sexual Abuse Treatment Center who will speak about his work in an alternative sentencing program with men accused of incest;

SPECIAL TO JAMES G. TRULOVE

June 23, 1982

At Northeastern Illinois University, a state-funded commuter institution with an enrollment of 10,000 students, there has not been a tightening of admission standards in recent years. Students must be in the upper half of their graduating class or have an ACT score of 23 to be accepted for admission to the university.

There are no formal honors programs at Northeastern. Students may graduate with honors or high honors.

Northeastern's new General Education Model will go into effect in September, 1982. The university is one of 14 original members of the National Project on General Education Models, an Exxon/FIPSE-funded temporary consortium of colleges and universities engaged in undergraduate curriculum reform.

Currently, students at Northeastern are required to complete 30 credit hours of "core courses." The "core courses" consist of 12 hours in the humanities, nine hours in behavioral and social sciences and nine hours in the natural sciences and mathematics. Within these general categories, students are able to choose any courses they wish. Students are also required to pass Northeastern's English Language Competency Exam as a requirement for graduation.

The new General Education Model will require students to take a total of 42 credit hours: six in fine arts, nine in the humanities, 12 in the behavioral or social sciences, 12 in the natural sciences and three in interdisciplinary or professional studies. Students will choose the courses they will take from a "limited list of courses" that has been recommended by the University Educational Policy Council's Task Force on the General Education Model. As requirements for graduation, students must pass the English Language Competency Exam and demonstrate knowledge of library skills either by taking a course in which library skills are an integral part or by taking an approved library skills seminar or workshop.

It is the hope of Northeastern's University Educational Policy Council that the new, more structured General Education Model will provide students with the broad based knowledge, sensitivities and skills that they need to become lifelong learners, to pursue successful careers and to be productive members of society.
